Message from the Superintendent

The purpose of learning is growth, and our minds, unlike our bodies, can continue growing as we continue to live. – Mortimer Adler

American blues great B.B. King once said, “the most beautiful thing about learning is that nobody can take it away from you.” There’s no arguing with that. In District 211, we work daily to deliver a relevant education to our students that will ensure they excel in their future. What they learn will carry with them -- whether it is the concept of a solid business plan, the complexities of writing well, the passion for a beloved subject, or the grit to succeed.

We offer the same opportunity for our community.

Through our Adult Continuing Education Department, we provide an extensive collection of courses that allow our community members to renew their educational experience. This can mean revisiting something you’ve loved in the past or exploring something new or different.

In a world that is always changing, we recognize the need for individuals in our community to renew their passion for education and embrace learning again with the knowledge that what they learn here with us, from our skilled instructors, can never be taken from them.

We’ve created classes that will help you get creative, learn, or build skills in music, jewelry-making, photography and more. I am confident there is something for you in the pages of this catalog – something that will engage your love for learning. You’ll also find some updates on how our students are excelling in our schools throughout our community.

We look forward to seeing you in our classes!

Lisa Small

Reupholstering
Learn how to make those sagging favorites or a special find look like new. You will be shown the basic techniques for restoration and given close guidance by a practicing upholsterer. Because there is no storage facility at the school, students will have to take their projects with them after each class. Only single-seat chairs or footstools are recommended for the first project. The first class session will be devoted to classroom teaching. DO NOT bring your project the first night or buy any materials unless you have previously taken this class. Tuition does not include the cost of the materials. The instructor will provide a supply list after project assessments.

From Fremd Student to Award Winning Engineering Teacher

When Michael Karasch looks back on the start of his freshman year at William Fremd High School, he admits he was not in the best position academically.

“My family moved to the area just before my freshman year,” said Karasch, who graduated in 1999. “I was not on the best path coming into that year. I was not getting particularly good grades, but it was a fresh start at a new school and Fremd embraced me.”

Following his college graduation, Karasch began working in computer programming, but didn’t feel that fit with his desire to help others.

“I found that I really enjoyed helping other people rather than simply doing the work myself,” he said. “I felt there must be something more. So after assisting other teachers, I found I wanted to help make people the best they could be.”

Sixteen years ago, that desire brought Karasch back to his alma mater, where he began teaching engineering at Fremd High School. Currently he teaches two different engineering classes as well as a biology class. He says there is a great overlap between science and engineering.

“I heard it said once that the first time you try something, it’s science; the second time, it’s engineering,” Karasch said. “In science, we talk about discovery, research, and development, whereas in engineering, we’re refining. There is a giant overlap in where those things meet. When I teach science, I’m teaching engineering as well because we talk about recreating experiments and how to design their own experiments and how to revise their work.”

Karasch’s dedication to his students and dedication to the field of engineering was recognized in October when he was named the Project Lead the Way National Engineering Teacher of the Year.

Following the announcement, Karasch said he was flattered.

“I feel like there are a lot of people doing amazing work,” he said. “The PLTW teachers across the country are some of the best people I met and have had the privilege to work with. To be selected for this from among them is humbling.”

After nearly two decades teaching engineering, Karasch said he still finds joy in his work and does his best to give his students the same sense of belonging Fremd gave him years ago.

“The best thing about being an engineering teacher is that we get to play all day,” he said. “I never have to explain why we are learning the things we are. It’s all in the design. There is no greater motivation than being able to help a student build something neat.”

Karasch also finds joy in his work because he can give back to his school.

“Every time I’m here,” he said, “I feel like I am giving a little back to Fremd for everything they did for me.”
“GEMS helped me see that engineering was an option for me.”

When Mikayla Rau was in fifth grade, her mother approached her about a program at Conant High School. The program, GEMS (Girls in Mathematics and Science), had the purpose of showing young girls what careers were available in various science and mathematics fields.

“My mom had heard about it and said, ‘Hey let’s check this out,” said Rau. “My friend and I both liked science so we decided to go. We loved it.”

For more than 10 years, District 211 has hosted a GEMS weekend during which girls in junior high can work together with their peers, as well as high school STEM students, on various experiments and projects. The girls also hear from women in various STEM fields.

Not only did Rau attend GEMS in fifth grade –– she returned every year through middle school. When she entered freshman year at William Fremd High School, her developed passion for engineering led her into multiple courses in the school’s applied technology department.

Now in her senior year, she is very active in the building construction program and says she plans to pursue a degree in construction management.

Across the District, Schaumburg High School senior Madison Dohrn tells similar story. It was through the GEMS program, Dohrn says, that she saw new choices for her future.

“GEMS helped me see that engineering was an option for me,” she said. “It made things seem more accessible, and it was done in a fun way that kept my interest. It made me think that this was something I wanted to keep doing.”

That is exactly what she did. Following four years of STEM and Applied technology courses, 2022 Schaumburg graduate Dohrn will begin working on her mechanical engineering degree at Iowa State University this fall. She said all the programs and courses she has taken since her first interaction in GEMS helped ready her for the future.

“One thing that is helping me prepare for college is getting to use all the different machines,” said Dohrn. “Iowa State has a new innovation center that has anything you can think of. To use them, it helps understanding them before getting there.”

Rau encourages more girls to consider attending GEMS in middle school, continue the coursework in high school and consider fields where females may be underrepresented.

“This program will open their eyes,” Rau said. “Our society says girls should have jobs like doctors or lawyers. It’s not the gritty work. Talk to your counselors, talk to your applied tech teachers, get in this hallway.”
